Estepona sits about 81 km from Malaga International Airport and 49 km from Gibraltar. Head east and you hit Marbella; go west, and you're in Caseras or Manilva. Around 67,000 people call Estepona home. The weather? Pretty mild—the average temperature is 17°C, and it gets about 900 mm of rain each year.

If you love golf, Estepona's got you covered with eight courses. For upscale stays, there are four five-star hotels dotted across town. The coast stretches 21 km and boasts 13 beaches, four with blue flag status (so, clean and safe). You'll also find a marina split in two: one side buzzes with the daily action of the fishing port, where locals trade fresh catches, while the other is all about modern boats—think sea trips, yachting, and a bit of sporting glamour.

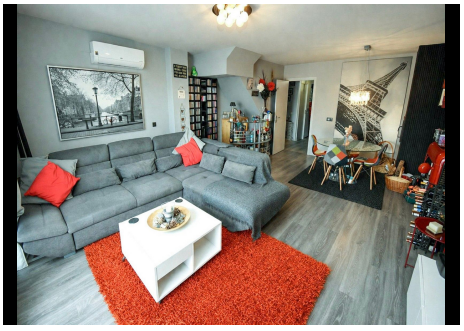

Manilva, on the other hand, is 93.5 km west of Malaga Airport and just 37 km from Gibraltar. It's a smaller spot—only around 13,000 people live there—which makes it feel a little more laid-back compared to other Costa del Sol towns. The climate stays steady at 17°C a year, with about 750 mm of rain.

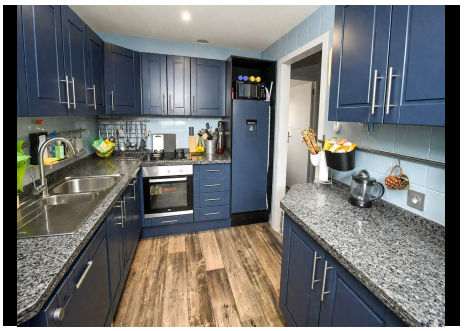

Golf fans will find one course in Manilva itself, but if you're ?willing ?to ?drive ?a ?bit, there ?are ten more within ?20 ?km. ?The ?coastline ?here ?runs for ?8 km, offering ?8 beaches—one ?flying ?the ?blue ?flag ?for ?its ?quality.
